NEVADA,

The Tonopah Sun has the following pungent paragraphs about this state and we publish it in full as meeting with the views of every true Nevadan:

Nevada is on to move. This is a phrase that is in every good citizen's mouth now. The accomplishments of the past six years have been great, indeed, but they will be but a drop in the bucket compared to the things that are to come.

From a wild and unnoticed wilderness of sagebrush and alkali, a place to be shunned, through which the palatial transcontinental trains sped when the dark of night blotted out the hideous barrenness of the landscape, the state had leaped almost at a bound to a position of importance.

It is now the mecca of fortune hunters of all classes. Its heretofore trackless wastes are being lined with the steel threads that weave the several states together into one glorious whole. Into its dull, grey hills, human gophers are burrowing, working night and day in search of hidden fortunes. As day by day the months creep past, each rising sun sees some new work undertaken within its borders. Each setting sun marks another stride in the march of progress.

Viewed from the standpoint of Nevada as it was six years ago the Nevada today is a new and unrecognizable state. With its growing population, its constantly increasing wealth, and its vast and unexplored resources, the state to-day holds out to the young men of the whole country, the men on whom the future of our mighty nation depends, a glowing promise, a field wherein the spirit of conquest, the pioneer spirit that has come down through the years to them from pioneer ancestors will find an outlet. Among all the many avenues of fortune and accomplishments that this busy land affords its workers today Nevada stands pre-eminent.

There are man things to be done in Nevada. Great has been work of the latter day pioneers, but theirs was a day of discovery while this is the age of upbuilding of the development and exploration of the marvelous country the prospector has opened.

Nevada is not solely dependent on its mines for its future greatness. Here and there among its mountains are hidden away fertile valleys, broad tracts that invite the attention of the farmer and ranchman. With irrigation much of the useless desert will be brought up to a point where it will raise anything that grows in any other state. Experience has shown that the desert needs only water to make it a veritable garden, and the water in many cases is to be obtained with comparative ease.

Yesterday saw Nevada a non-producer, an outcast from the sisterhood of states, of value only to the politician. Today sees Nevada climbing to a place of rank and power in that same sisterhood, bringing her share of the good things of earth to the world's markets. Tomorrow will see Nevada marching in the front rank of the states, bearing her share of the burdens, reaping her share of the profits, an integral and important part of a mighty common wealth.
